

DUTCH FLAT ENQUIRER.

A TRIP FROM STAR CITY TO DUTCH FLAT.

NUMBER TWO.

I found the Truckee much swollen and running with a rapid current. It was my intention to cross here and ascend the river upon the left bank, thereby saving one day's journeying; and laboring under the impression that I could ford the river, I forced my faithful animal into the water; I was well aware of the natural tendency of all floating bodies to move with the current, yet notwithstanding the possession of this knowledge, I became slightly agitated, when I beheld the ears and nose of my mule moving with alacrity upon the surface of the fluid, direct for Pyramid Lake, while my intended destination lay in an opposite direction, and with that wonderful faculty of mind which characterized Sir Isaac Newton I suddenly "jumped to the conclusion" that that mode of travel was not suited to my condition in life. Imagine my delight when my equined bottom and again landed but not dry upon the sandy beach. What was I to do? I had been wrongly informed that there was a station at this crossing on the right bank of the river. I rode up and down in search of some signs of civilization until I espied a light upon the opposite shore. I then and there made night hideous with discordant sounds which attracted the attention of the settlers, three of whom came over in a skiff to my relief, and informed me that I must either swim the stream, ascend the right bank for forty miles over the damndest trail a man ever undertook to travel, or turn back in a somewhat different direction from which I had come, and with my animal that I had nothing to eat since morning, and no distant prospect of long miles horse and rider to the toll-house at Valley Wells on the road I had left in the afternoon, and proceed thence by the way of Virginia City. It was now dark and cloudy; it was impossible to cross the river; I was unacquainted with the trail; myself and animal required food, we could obtain none where we were, so I concluded to turn back. "You will come out all right," said my informers "if you can only strike the right road through the tall briery grease-wood." They pointed me out the general direction by a prominent landmark, and I set forth relying more upon the sagacity of my mule than upon my own. After wandering an hour or more, during which time I constantly praised in an emphatic (and I flatter myself an artistic style, the moistening attribute of the sweet sparkling water of Lake Tahoe, and pronounced a heart-felt blessing upon old John Bigler for his complicity in the matter, fortune once more smiled, and I entered upon what proved to be the correct road. I had proceeded about half way and was checking my weary companion, who was walking in front of me, by humming the good old Methodist hymn commencing, "We'll stand the storm, it won't be long, we'll anchor by and by," when all of a sudden, but a few feet in the rear, we were loudly accosted by the sharp hoarse howl of half a dozen white desert wolves. My mule stamped among the grease-wood, which grows high and thick in this deep sand, and had she not been white I might not have found her or any part thereof until morning. I felt my hair crawl and creep beneath my hat as these desert guerrillas crowded up close to me, rolling their fiery eyes in the dark, and leveling fire and steel upon my treacherous and dangerous companions; to associate with when they are hungry, and judging from the country they inhabit, they are always hungry. I had nothing but a revolver to defend myself with. I could not run in such sand, and dared not run if I could. I was not needed at this point, for my mule had entered a narrow gulch, and fearful apprehensions concerning my latter end, thinking that if the resurrection day was close at hand, and I compelled to inhabit my old body, I would appear in the new order of things a conglomerate of man and wolf, and remembering that a brave man is not he who feels no fear, but he whose noble soul is free from subduing and bravely dares the danger which nature shrinks from, I faced my enemies, and without going through the preliminary military tactics and discipline, fired at the nearest eyes, which rolled like balls of fire in the dark. I chanced to shoot one of my foes through the head, whereupon the remainder of them retreated rapidly down the road, and I heard no more of them. I inspected my game by the light of a match, he was tall, slim built, but more than twice the size of a common corvid wolf.

I found my mule, and regained the road with some difficulty reaching the place of my destination for the night about eleven o'clock, P. M. After securing my mule, I entered my quarters and carefully attended to, I joined supper, whereupon "mine host" presented me with a huge health-invigorating elevator, which he politely introduced to me as an appetite cultivator. It proved to be a phlegm-cutter of the first water, and reminded me of the famous mark of an Irishman, a real Mick, that I once met in the East. The Maine Liquor Law was in force. He purchased a pint of good smooth brandy of the town agent, who, of course, charged a high price for the same. Pat tasted the brandy, and declared that when he was in "New York" he could buy that much for half the price, that would burn the very insides of his out.

Well, supper being ready, I sat down to satiate my hunger upon ham and eggs, fresh fish from the Truckee, and bread, butter, coffee, milk, etc., of the best quality. Everything placed before me vanished like snow falls on the river. My meal being finished, I was ushered into a sleeping room, where I found my friend Ned snoring bass to the seven devils "wandering on the night's Plutonian shore." I lay down desiring to sleep soundly. Oh! how sweet, how refreshing and invigorating, how glad and joyous to pass off the long hours of the night in deep and quiet slumber! Instead of enjoying this luxury, I dreamed of imaginary fish and monster eggs, of the pleasant way of terminating life by drowning, and to change the scene, the horror of being eaten alive by wolves, and leaving my bones to bleach on the deserts of the Great Basin. I arose at early day-break, purposely putting an end to so unpleasant a mode of life, and proceeded to the landlady as I paid him a dollar for this privilege of dreaming, that he had a "mighty good thing on Schneider."

From this place to Virginia City, forty miles, little occurred of interest. We arrived at the latter place early in the afternoon, rested awhile, took tea, and were driven around the town, everything was dull, no mines at work but the old paying claims; no buying and selling stocks; not a word on the subject of feet; everybody complaining of dull times; all dull times everywhere in the new State. Their Legislators, last winter, passed a Specific Contract Act, upon the main supposition that it would restore confidence and make times lively. No such effect has ever been realized, while the State compromised her patriotism through her bullet-headed servants. I have never favored the Specific Contract Act of California; never believed it legal and constitutional, nor that it would prove to be a benefit to the citizens, think it is an indirect manner, a paltry evasion law. Let all such be wiped from the statute books.

It would be superfluous to give a description of Virginia City. I have met an old friend, John Wilson, still wearing the ribbons, driving stage between this point and Hunter's, on the Truckee. He looked as fine as ever, enjoying good health, and in the best of spirits. "Long may he live."

About 11 o'clock I was startled from my repose by the alarm of fire; bells ringing, engines rolling, men shouting and women screaming. I dressed myself in double-quick, opened a fire-escape window, and saw the International, and looking down on D. street, saw the liquid flames reaching up and darting out their fiery forked tongues as it over anxious to embrace and devour the entire city, but the fire companies were soon at work and by hard exertion the flames were extinguished before doing any additional damage. While watching the crowd beneath, I espied a man directly in front of me endeavoring to move a hose carriage out of the way of a large engine; it requires at least four men to man such a carriage with any ease or safety. The carriage got the better of the man, ran down Union street with him, forced him against a house, and crashed in with him. He was alive the following morning, but his physician very coolly remarked "George has pulled on his last hose."

Before starting from Virginia City I read in a morning paper the following:

"HIGHWAY ROBBERY.—On the grade between here and Steamboat Valley three men were robbed yesterday in broad day light, one of the victims having, but seventy-five cents on his person, was damaged, kicked and severely abused for being a poor man."

This was pleasant to contemplate, as I had to travel over the same grade. I at once made up my mind that if any of these roadsters called on me for benevolent purposes, I should sell out at cost, donate liberally, receive the usual amount of sole leather like a philosopher, and as a subsequent, contemplate my projects for the future. I passed over the road however, undisturbed. At the foot of the grade on the west side of the Virginia mountains we strike out into Steamboat Valley, which presents a most beautiful appearance, quite a large village has sprung up here, and as far as the eye can reach in every direction farm houses are seen surrounded with well-fenced and cultivated fields. The Valley of the Truckee to the North-West, shows almost one continued village for twenty miles or more.

All those who passed through Steamboat Valley in 1859 will remember two young men by the name of Brown who had located a ranch there, in 59 they sold milk at a bit per gallon, and throwed what they could not sell away. Now they realize, as I was informed, an annual income of thirty thousand dollars, they have built a fine large residence and each have married a wife to share life's joys and sorrows with, they have not only been lucky, but are both sensible young men. I passed men, at different localities who were throwing up ditch fences and clearing off sage brush preparatory to cultivating the soil. It is asserted by those who have tried the experiment, that sage brush land will irrigated will produce abundantly; thus we see what has been so long a wild waste, where millions of "flowers bloom unseen and waste their fragrance on the desert air" converted into gardens for the benefit and support of man. After making a circuit of seventy three miles I have again reached the Truckee, and stop for dinner.

CORRECTION.—When we have said or done any wrong we are always glad to be set right, and take the first opportunity to acknowledge our error. In our reply to a correspondent relative to the impropriety of Notaries Public reading deeds and other instruments taken before them for acknowledgement we find that we were wrong, as the following section, copied from the laws of 1862, entitled "An Act to provide for the appointment of Notaries Public," will show. We correct our statement because we were wrong, and that none may feel aggrieved at officers making themselves acquainted with matters, the act of acknowledging which is intended to publish to the world:

Sec. 9. Each Notary Public shall also keep a fair record, wherein he shall enter the name or character of any instrument acknowledged or proved before him, as provided in Section 6 of the Act, together with the date of the same and the parties thereto, as the same appears thereon.

LOOK OUT.—Fred. Grohs don't intend waiting a thousand years for his debtors to settle. A word to the wise is sufficient; let fools suffer.

THE POISONING OF ANDREW JOHNSON.—From Wilkes' Spirit of April 24th, we take the following: There can be little doubt in the minds of those who have attentively perused the details of the plot to assassinate the leaders of the Government, that Andrew Johnson, who has endured so much undeserved obloquy for his single declaration on the 4th of March, was, on that occasion, not under the influence of spirituous liquors, nor either of a mere disturbing drug, intended only to disguise him, but of a deadly poison, furtively insinuated into his drink with the view to take his life. It is in proof that the assassin, who has since been apprehended, had posted himself in a position where Lincoln must pass closely by, and it was doubtless expected that about the time when the President should have perished by the pistol, the new Vice President would have expired in the Capitol from the effect of the poison he had taken. Probably this view of the matter has never struck the mind of Johnson, and it is not to be supposed that under the mystery of that strange occurrence, which must have puzzled him more than anybody else, he would care to allude to the affair with any attempts at explanation that might have been misunderstood. The disclosure of the instructions distributed among the assassins, that "they were at liberty to use the blade, the pistol, or the bowl, but they must bear in mind the latter had once failed," seems to be conclusive on this point, and will doubtless suggest some important recollections to the President's mind. His powerful nature triumphed over the infernal draught, and thus, in addition to an invaluable life being saved to the nation, we are gratified in the conviction, that one who has always been a sober, self-respecting statesman, is now providentially relieved from even a passing cloud on his career.

A FOUR DEAD.—Charles McNair, of American Flat, Nevada county, was shot and killed on Monday night by one Edna, after a dispute upon the main question, when McNair praised Booth for killing Lincoln. This led to severe language, some hours after which the homicide took place.

ACCIDENT.—A man named Phillip had one of his legs broken while at work in the Franklin claims at Swamp Flat, Plumas county, by a boulder, which he with others was attempting to remove, rolling upon him.

HOPKINS FOR THE APPLICANT.—In another part of this paper will be found the advertisement of the celebrated Institute established by Dr. J. C. YOUNG, in 1850. In this age of deceit and charlatanism it is a boon to the suffering to be pointed out to them where they are sure of obtaining relief for relief and cure. Under the care of the Institute the sick and troubled can direct themselves of their burdens of pain; lay aside their fears, and secure health and happiness. If you are sick or in trouble do not hesitate, read the advertisement and follow the advice. Do not forget the number nor the manner of directing your letters. Consultation Office, 546, Washington street San Francisco.

Medical Camp.—Success is said to be the criterion of merit. If this is so, Dr. Doberty is not an exception to the rule. Of the many physicians who have tried to cure the particular branches to which he has devoted his particular study, none has attained that wonderful success in general practice which daily attend at his office. The great Record, of Paris, specially devoted his attention to the particular branch of Medicine denominated Specific and Chronic. Dr. Doberty has determined to do the same. Read his advertisement in another column, and the sworn statement of cures.

Da. W. K. DOBERRY, Private Medical and Surgical Institute, Sacramento street, below Montgomery, (opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship Co's office.) Private entrance on Leidesdorff street, San Francisco.
